WAILUKU

Maybe the Mayan calendar got it right - but we got the Mayan calendar wrong.

That's the premise of "2012: The Beginning," the documentary that opened the 2012 Maui Film Festival on Wednesday.

The festival, featuring some 45 movies of all shapes, sizes, genres and styles, will continue this afternoon through Sunday night at Wailea's outdoor Celestial Cinema and in Castle Theater at the Maui Arts & Cultural Center. FOLLOW:

Inspired by The Artist, Renee Kayon, who worked as the best "boy" (lighting technician) on the Oscar-winning movie, has just made her own black-and-white homage to love. It's called "Le Petit Nuage." And while The Artist was shot by French people in L.A., George, an L.A. resident, filmed her wordless movie in Paris. It's short and sweet, perfect for anyone needing a snack of Paris.

Los Angeles: April 24, 2012

Renée Kayon is a Los Angeles-based filmmaker who is also an experienced lighting professional in Hollywood. She studied photography and film and holds a BFA in Media Arts from the Minneapolis College of Art and Design, and attended the Graduate Film program at New York University. After working on the Academy Award winning film, The Artist she wrote and directed an impressive short film called "Le Petit Nuage" and is now transitioning to feature-length projects. We caught up with the filmmaker and asked her about her life and career.

On the movie set near Mint Hill, Jennifer Gage (left) who plays a hitchhiker in the film NOWHEREVILLE, helps Sharon Angela who was scratched during filming. Sharon plays a sister who was fighting with her brother, played by Richard Boes. The story is being filmed locally with help from Carolina Production Services of Charlotte.

Renee Kayon, Director, and Andrea Dorman, Camera, prepare to shoot Richard Boes (in the car at left). The Story of the film is of a brother and sister who come together after many years to take a cross-country trip to attend their mother's funeral.
